The Nephites charge him with chronicling their lives and victories, and he's the keeper of Nephi's sacred records. Once Mormon becomes an old man with his own son, Moroni, he passes the records down for safekeeping. The Book of Mormon promotes American exceptionalism, because it suggests that God values the Americas above all others. The Nephites and the Lamanites slowly replace the Jaredites, who

The Book of Mormon adds, "The labor which they had to perform was to look; and because of the simpleness of the way, or the easiness of it, there were many who perished" (1 Nephi 17:41). Without the Book of Mormon account of this story, the reader would not see the important punch line, that many of the people died because they took lightly the prophet's simple warning to look to the serpent.

One of Moroni's exhortations in the final chapter of the Book of Mormon is to "remember that every good gift cometh of Christ" (Moroni 10:18). This echoes the testimony of James: Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.
