"Branded - The Buying and Selling of Teenagers" sees Alissa Quart focusing on the increasing pervasion of corporate marketing to teens and pre-teens. She examines the harm that such efforts can cause to children, arguing that it forces youngsters to act in a more 'adult' way far too quickly, and isolates individuals who do not subscribe to opinions on the 'right' labels, stars, movies, etc.

Branded – The Buying and Selling of Teenagers. Teenagers have always been important to brands because they tend to be early adopters and because, generally, their brand preferences aren't yet firmly defined. Alissa Quart explores the relationship between teenagers and the media in her novel Branded: The Buying and Selling of Teenagers.

There are several important advantages to creating your own branded products versus selling un-branded ones: 1) Product uniqueness. By having your own brand printed on the product/packaging you essentially create a UNIQUE offer in the marketplace. It doesn't matter that other people may be selling the exact same product – due to the brand and packaging yours is unique.
