The Chinese Emperor's New Clothes is the real version of the old folktale about two sly tailors tricking the emperor into parading around town naked in his magical robes. This folktale follows Ming Da, the 9-year-old emperor, as he prepares for Chinese New Year and dealing with his dishonest ministers.

Partly new – and completely groundbreaking, China’s pledge to reach peak carbon emissions by 2030 is not new but has been submitted as part of its unconditional Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs), as China ratified the Paris Agreement back in 2016. In his recent speech, this pledge remains essentially the same: President Xi states that China’s emissions will peak “before 2030 ...

“In Ying Chang Compestine’s The Chinese Emperor’s New Clothes, a resourceful boy emperor takes on his swindling advisers, causing them to parade in rice sacks as he wins back his wealth to feed and clothe the poor. This is an appealing twist on a well-loved tale, brought vividly to life by David Roberts’s apple-cheeked, expressive illustrations.”

This twist on a classic has a new setting, more dimension, and wonderful art to draw kids into the story. The Chinese Emperor's New Clothes does more than expose a ruler's vanity and his people's urge to go along with whatever he says, despite what they see with their own eyes. Here, the boy ruler is honest, caring, and intent on exposing his corrupt ministers.
