The electro-pop duo, composed of Colorado natives Sean Foreman and Nathaniel Motte, rose to fame on Myspace, wore skinny jeans, and performed on Warped Tour. Their two breakout singles, "Don't Trust Me" and the Katy Perry-featuring "Starstruck," were party anthems for scene kids. A long decade later, they're as of-their-time as QWERTY keyboard phones and side bangs.

Also, don't trust a vaccine. Which, at least when it was convenient for various tyrannical governors to control us, is the ONLY THING that will get us back to normal. The media wants to mock people who don't "trust the experts." Look how quickly the "experts" started singing a different tune once it was politically convenient.
